A supramolecular hydrogel system based on the cell-permeant peptide oligonucleotide 4, and oligo-2'-deoxycytidine derivatives, with diverse purine and pyrimidine scaffolds, has been successfully developed. The NIR fluorescent dye 7-diethylamino-4-methyl-3-coumarinyl Rhodamine (DtAMC) was incorporated into the hydrogel to monitor the cellular uptake of the peptide/oligo-DNA hybrid 4-oligo-2'-deoxycytidine in Hela cells. In the presence of target DNA, the hydrogel formed in the cell culture medium lost its gel structure and aggregated under the effect of the target DNA. Cellular uptake of the hydrogel into cells was recorded by means of DtAMC fluorescence, and the fluorescence intensity of the cell increases with the amount of DNA. The DtAMC fluorescence in cells of 4-oligo-2'-deoxycytidine mixed hydrogel has also been used for DNA sensing. DNA detection was accomplished within less than 30 min. The supramolecular hydrogel of 4-oligo-2'-deoxycytidine mixed with the cell-permeant peptide and NIR dyes is a new model for intracellular imaging, and DNA sensing in living cells. A Fortnite-inspired mobile game has been available to download on mobile devices in China since April and now it has seen its success hit a new, staggering, milestone: a whopping 700 million monthly players. The app was the fastest growing mobile game in China's history, surpassing the record held by Activision's mobile title Diablo II, which saw 1.6 million daily users in China in early 2012. Earlier this week, Fortnite Battle Royale, as the game is known in the West, was added to China's App Store, albeit with Chinese language support. That should come as no surprise as Tencent 3da54e8ca3
